The Fulbright Program is the flagship international educational exchange program of the U.S. Department of State's Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs. Led by the United States government in partnership with 160 other countries and administered by 49 binational commissions and by U.S. embassies around the world, Fulbright offers academic exchange programs for accomplished students, scholars, artists, teachers, and professionals of all backgrounds. Selected through a competitive, merit-based process, these current and emerging leaders, in all disciplines, study, teach, and/or conduct research in their host communities overseas. Fulbrighters are committed to fostering international understanding by exchanging ideas and contributing to finding solutions to complex international challenges.

Fulbright alumni pursue a range of professions and include ambassadors, members of Congress, judges, heads of corporations, university presidents, scientists, journalists, artists, professors, teachers, and business professionals. U.S. Fulbright alumni represent the United States as unofficial citizen ambassadors in their foreign host communities and, upon their return home, use skills gained during their Fulbright experience, which may be directly relevant to careers in the U.S. government.
